U.S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Patent and Trademark Office

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY AUTHORITY OF CONGRESS

The Patent and Trademark Office, itself preparing for its 200th anniversary celebration, wishes the U.S. Department of Commerce a very happy 75th birthday.

The Department of Commerce was established on March 4, 1913. The Patent Office, having been a bureau of the Department of State and, subsequently, the Department of the Interior, was transferred to the Commerce Department in 1925.

The Patent and Trademark Office has continued to work in harmony with its sister agencies to bring to fruition Departmental goals. Our more significant role in this respect includes efforts

- to increase America's competitiveness in the world economy by strengthening worldwide protection of intellectual property;
- to stimulate productivity and economic development by promoting the development and application of science and technology in U.S. industries and by reducing patent pendency and improving patent quality; and
- to improve service delivery and internal management by automating the patent and trademark processes.

Three quarters of a century and twenty-seven Commerce Secretaries later, more than 33,000 dedicated employees certainly dispell the characterization of the Department by Oscar S. Straus, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor from 1906 to 1909. He told Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce from 1921 to 1928, that the office required only a couple of hours of work a day and "no other qualification than to be able to put the fish to bed at night and turn on the lights around the coast."

Congratulations!

Donald J. Quigg
Assistant Secretary and Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks

Request for Comments on the Proposal for the Harmonization of Unity of Invention Practice Among the Trilateral Offices (The U.S. Patent & Trademark Office, The European Patent Office and the Japanese Patent Office)

Harmonization of restriction practice, or unity of invention practice, as it is called internationally, is presently being pursued within the Trilateral Cooperation Effort involving the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO), the European Patent Office (EPO) and the Japanese Patent Office (JPO). The purpose of this notice is to solicit public comment on the most recent draft proposal of the harmonization of unity of invention practice among the USPTO, the EPO and the JPO. The Jan. 12, 1988 draft Trilateral harmonization proposal on unity of invention practice appears immediately after this notice.

Purpose of Harmonization

The purpose of the harmonization of unity of invention practice is to develop a single specific definition of unity of invention which will be the same in all three Trilateral offices. This should simplify and facilitate the filing and prosecution of patent applications in all three offices for patent applicants. The aim of the harmonization proposal is to provide a unity of invention practice which is well-defined, reasonable, logical and workable and as uniformly applied as possible in all three offices. A harmonized unity of invention practice will effectively serve the needs of the patent applicants and attorneys and will benefit those who seek patent protection in each of the three offices because they would not have to comply with different requirements. It is anticipated that if the USPTO adopts a harmonized proposal as outlined herein, the unity of invention practice would be uniformly applied to all applications, including international applications filed under the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT).

Efforts to Date

Work on harmonization of unity of invention practice initially involved a comparative study of the unity of invention practice currently used in each of the three offices for PCT and national or regional applications. The EPO, as the lead office for the unity of invention project, prepared a comparative study report based on the national reports provided by each office. The comparative study report was discussed at the Fourth Trilateral Conference held in Jan. of 1987. After consultation with various members of the U.S. patent bar during a meeting held in Dec. of 1986, the USPTO, at the Jan. 1987 Trilateral Conference, agreed with the EPO and the JPO to use the EPO unity of invention practice as the basis for harmonization discussions and to exchange proposals for the harmonization and simplification of the unity of invention practices. The harmonization proposals were also discussed at the Trilateral Meetings held in Sept. and Nov. of 1987. Subsequent to the Nov. Trilateral Meeting, the EPO prepared a draft harmonization proposal which reflected the EPO's views of the results of the Nov. Trilateral Meeting. This draft harmonization proposal was discussed with an ad hoc committee of the American Intellectual Property Law Association (AIPLA) in Dec. of 1987. However, there was not enough time to fully review this draft harmonization proposal with all members of the U.S. patent bar between the Nov. 1987 Trilateral Meeting and the Fifth Trilateral Conference held Jan. 11-15, 1988. Comments on the draft harmonization proposal from the USPTO and the JPO were submitted to the EPO and discussed at the Jan. 1988 Trilateral Conference. At the Jan. 1988 Trilateral Conference, the USPTO reserved the right to modify its position on the harmonization proposal after further consultation with the private sector. The attached draft harmonization proposal for unity of invention practice was the result of the discussions at the Fifth Trilateral Conference and was drafted by the EPO. Further discussions will be held at the June 1988 Trilateral Technical Meeting. The three offices agreed that after each office completes consultations with its private sector, the harmonization proposal will be further discussed and finalized, if possible, at the next Trilateral Conference scheduled for the fall of 1988.

The USPTO has consulted with representatives and experts of the U.S. patent bar as harmonization relating to unity of invention has proceeded. Such consultations will continue as harmonization efforts progress. It should be noted however that any modifications in the harmonization proposal must also be acceptable to the EPO and JPO in order to be adopted.

Date: Any comments and suggestions on the harmonization proposal should be received by May 9, 1988.

Address: Address written comments and suggestions to the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, Washington, D.C. 20231 to the attention of R. Franklin Burnett, Crystal Plaza 3-11A13. For further information contact R. Franklin Burnett by telephone at (703) 557-3054.

Analysis of Proposal

The unity of invention proposal being considered in the Trilateral harmonization effort is based on a single general inventive concept and involves specific guidelines in the following areas:

1. Different categories of invention;
2. Independent claims of the same category including genus/species and combination/subcombination;
3. Markush practice;
4. Intermediate/final products; and
5. Procedural aspects.

The harmonization proposal contains certain general principles applicable to all the areas noted above. Basic rules and guidelines are set forth for each of the above-noted areas in the attached draft harmonization proposal.

General Principles

Section (A), General Principles, sets forth the principle that an application shall relate to one invention only or to a group of inventions so linked as to form a single general inventive concept. The same language is set forth in PCT Rule 13.1. The determination of whether there is a single general inventive concept would be based on the extent to which there is a close technical interrelationship between the inventions claimed. Adoption of the harmonization proposal would eliminate the current USPTO practice of determining whether multiple inventions are claimed in an application based on the independent/distinct standard of 35 U.S.C. 121 and substitute a standard based on whether a single general inventive concept is being recited in all of the claims of an application, which standard would be uniformly applied in all applications, including international applications filed under the PCT.

Different Categories of Invention

Section (B)(1) relates to different categories of invention. The basic rule of this section permits different categories of invention (product, process, apparatus, use) to be claimed in a single application provided they are so linked as to form a single general inventive concept. In order for the requirement of a single general inventive concept to be satisfied all the claims of the different categories must include one or more of the same or corresponding special technical feature(s) thereby establishing a close technical interrelationship between the inventions of different categories. The expression "special technical features" means those technical features which define the contribution(s) which the invention makes over the prior art. The three combinations of claims to different categories of invention listed in PCT Rule 13.2 are included in the basic rule. However, the terms "specially adapted" and "specifically designed" are defined in the guidelines in more detail than presently exists with respect to PCT Rule 13.2. The basic rule clearly points out that other combinations, including claims of different scope to different categories of invention are acceptable provided that the claims are so linked as to form a single general inventive concept as defined in section (B)(1)(a). Adoption of the harmonization proposal would eliminate the "distinctness" criteria as applied to the current USPTO practice for national applications and substitute an analysis of a single general inventive concept, which analysis would be uniformly applied to all applications, including international applications filed under the PCT.

Claims to the Same Catergory of Invention

Section (B)(2) relates to claims to the same category of invention. Genus/species, combination/subcombination and independent claims to the same category have been grouped together under this section of the harmonization proposal since the approach and criteria for determining unity of invention are the same for claims of these types. The basic rule of this section points out that the basic test for unity is the same for claims to the same category as in the case of claims to different categories of invention, i.e., in order for the requirement of a single general inventive concept to be satisfied all of the claims must include one or more of the same or corresponding special technical feature(s) thereby establishing a close technical interrelationship between the inventions. The determination of unity of invention is the same whether the different inventions are claimed in different claims or as alternatives in a single claim. The standard for determining unity of invention would be uniformly applied to all applications, including international applications filed under the PCT.

Markush

Section (C)(I) relates to Markush practice. The basic rule of this section sets forth that in order for the requirement of a single general inventive concept to be satisfied a claim must cover alternatives that (a) are of a similar nature and (b) do not make the claim obscure or difficult to construe. In order to determine whether chemical or non-chemical alternatives are of a similar nature, the test set forth in the basic rule for claims to the same category (section (B)(2)(a)) is applied, that is, do all the claims include one or more of the same or corresponding special technical feature(s) thereby establishing a close technical interrelationship between the inventions? When the Markush grouping is for alternatives of chemical compounds, they satisfy the basic rules in section (B)(2)(a) and are of a similar nature when the criteria set forth in the guidelines are satisfied. The standard for determining unity of invention would be uniformly applied to all applications, including international applications filed under the PCT.

Intermediate and Final Products

Section (C)(II) relates to intermediate and final products. Two alternatives to the basic rule in this section are set forth. Both of the alternatives are under further consideration by the Trilateral offices. Both of the alternatives would permit applications to contain claims which have the relationship of being intermediate and final products. In order for the requirement of a single general inventive concept to be satisfied under the two alternatives, (a) the intermediate and final products must exhibit the same essential structural element and (b) the intermediate and final products must be in close interrelationship. The first alternative differs from the second alternative in that the first alternative sets forth the criteria that if the intermediate has a separate patentability, the intermediate and final product relationship no longer exists. Unity is then determined according to the criteria set forth for claims to the same category. Under the second alternative, the fact that the intermediate has a separate patentability would not affect the determination of unity of invention according to the criteria set forth for intermediate and final products. Adoption of the harmonization proposal would eliminate the current USPTO one way distinctness test and substitute an analysis of the degree to which a close interrelationship and the same essential structural element are present, which analysis would be uniformly applied to all applications, including international applications filed under the PCT.

Procedural Matters

Section (D) relates to the manner of examination and other procedural matters and would permit the current USPTO practice on matters such as the filing of divisional applications and determination of the elected invention. An office could grant applicant the right to file a divisional application as the result of a holding of lack of unity of invention at any time up to at least the time when the parent application is in order for a grant. Section (D)(3)(b) has been bracketed upon request by the JPO. The three Trilateral offices have not yet agreed to this particular section. The JPO requested additional time to further consider this section and indicated that it must, for the time being, reserve any commitment to the language set forth in this section.

Change in United States Law

The present U.S. patent laws and rules governing restriction practice on the basis of "independent and distinct inventions" will have to be changed in order to adopt the unity of invention practice set forth in the harmonization proposal which is governed by the "single general inventive concept". A change in U.S. law will be required for two purposes. A change is needed in the present 35 U.S.C. 121, which permits restriction for "independent and distinct" inventions to assure that there is authority in the statute for the type of unity of invention practice set forth in the draft harmonization proposal, including a revised U.S. Markush practice. Second, the change in the U.S. restriction practice may increase the average burden per application required to examine and process certain types of applications and reduce the total number of applications that are filed although the number of claims and scope of subject matter claimed would remain the same or even increase. Accordingly, fee income would fall and statutory fee increases would be required to offset these impacts. In addition to changes in Title 35 of the U.S. Code, appropriate changes will be made in the rules relating to unity of invention practice involving both national applications and international applications.

Draft

Project 12.1
Trilateral Proposals for Harmonization of Unity of Invention Practice

(A) General Principles

(1) A patent application shall relate to one invention only or to a group of inventions so linked as to form a single general inventive concept (requirement of unity of invention).
(2) A plurality of inventions may be claimed in separate claims or as alternatives within a single claim. In either case, the determination whether there is a single general inventive concept should be based on the extent to which there is a close technical interrelationship between the inventions claimed.
(3) An objection of lack of unity may be raised at any stage in the procedure relating to a patent application i.e. a priori before a search has been made or a posteriori after a partial or complete search. However lack of unity is not a ground of objection against a granted patent and a patent may not be held invalid because the examiner failed to object where unity was lacking.
(4) If the different inventions fall within the Basic rules set forth below which apply the General Principles, then unity of invention is present. If, on the other hand, the inventions do not fall within the Basic rules, an objection of lack of unity is proper.

(B) Application of the General Principles (A) to Different Combinations of Claims

(1) Claims to different categories

Basic rules

(a) Claims to different categories of inventions are so linked as to form a single general inventive concept when all of the claims of the different categories include one or more of the same or corresponding special technical feature(s) thereby establishing a close technical interrelationship between the inventions of different categories. The expression "special technical features" means those technical features which define the contribution(s) which the invention makes over the prior art.
(b) Claims for the following combinations of different categories of invention satisfy the above requirements and thus have unity of invention. This does not imply that other combinations, including combinations in which the claims in the different categories are also of different scope, may not also be acceptable in cases where the above requirements are satisfied.

One and the same patent application may include:

(i) in addition to an independent claim for a given product, an independent claim for a process specially adapted for the manufacture of the said product, and an independent claim for a use of the said product; or
(ii) in addition to an independent claim for a given process, an independent claim for an apparatus or means specifically designed for carrying out the said process; or
(iii) in addition to an independent claim for a given product, an independent claim for a process specially adapted for the manufacture of the said product, and an independent claim for an apparatus or means specifically designed for carrying out the said process.

Guidelines to Basic rule (b)

1. References in (i) to (iii) to "process", "product", "apparatus", "means" or "use" refer to these inventions as recited in the claims.
2. In (i) and (iii), the requirement that the process has to be "specially adapted" for the manufacture of the product is fulfilled if the process results exclusively in the claimed product. The expression "specially adapted" does not imply that the product could not also be manufactured by a different process. It also does not imply that the same kind of process of manufacture could not also be used for the manufacture of other products.
3. In (ii) and (iii), the requirement that the apparatus or means has to be "specifically designed" for carrying out the process is fulfilled if the apparatus or means is suitable for carrying out the whole process and if there is at least one special technical feature in the apparatus or means which establishes a close technical interrelationship with the same or corresponding technical feature in the process. It follows from the above conditions that it is not sufficient for unity that the apparatus or means is merely capable of being used in carrying out the process. On the other hand, the expression "specifically designed" does not imply that the apparatus or means could not be used for carrying out another process, nor that the process could not be carried out using an alternative apparatus or means.

(2) Claims to the same category

Basic rules

(a) The basic test for unity is the same as in the case of claims in different categories. Claims of the same category are so linked as to form a single general inventive concept when all of the claims include one or more of the same or corresponding special technical feature(s) thereby establishing a close technical interrelationship between the inventions. The expression "special technical features" means those technical features which define the contribution(s) which the invention makes over the prior art.

Furthermore, the determination of unity is exactly the same whether the different inventions (e.g. products, processes) are claimed in different claims or as alternatives in a single claim.*

Unity has to be considered in the first place only in relation to the independent claim and not the dependent claims. By "dependent" claim is meant a claim which contains all the features of another claim.

* Each Office is however free to object to alternatives being contained in a single claim in the light of considerations such as clarity or conciseness of claims and the claims fee system applicable in that Office.

(b) If the independent claims are patentable and satisfy the unity requirement, no problem of lack of unity can arise in respect of the dependent claims. In particular, it does not matter if a dependent claim itself contains a further invention. Equally, no problem arises in the case of a genus/species situation where the genus claim is patentable.

No problem arises in the case of a combination/subcombination situation where the subcombination claim is patentable and the combination claim includes all the features of the subcombination.

(c) If, however, an independent claim is not patentable then the question whether there is still an inventive link between all the claims dependent on that claim needs to be carefully considered in view of the Basic rule (a) above.

If there is no link remaining, an objection of unity a posteriori should be raised. Similar considerations apply in the case of a genus/species or combination/subcombination situation.

(C) Application of the General Principles to Special Chemical Problems

I. Markush Practice

(1) Basic rule

A claim may cover alternatives provided that:

(a) those alternatives are of a similar nature; and
(b) the number and presentation of alternatives in a single claim do not make the claim obscure or difficult to construe.*

Basic rule (B)(2)(a) applies when determining whether chemical or non-chemical alternatives are of a similar nature.

(2) Guidelines

1. In order for a claim that includes a Markush grouping to possess unity, all of the recited alternatives must be technically interrelated.
2. When the Markush grouping is for alternatives of chemical compounds, they are deemed to satisfy Basic rule (B)(2)(a) and to be of a similar nature when the following criteria are fulfilled:

(a) all alternatives have a common property or activity and either
(b)(i) a common structure is present, i.e. a significant structural element is shared by all of the alternatives; or (b)(ii) in cases where the common structure cannot be the unifying criteria, all alternatives belong to a recognized class of compounds in the art to which the invention pertains.

— In (b)(i) above, "significant structural element is shared by all of the alternatives" refers to cases where the compounds share a common chemical structure which occupies a large portion of their structures, or in case the compounds have in common only a small portion of their structures, the commonly shared structure constitutes a structurally distinctive portion in view of existing prior art.

The structural element may be a single component or a combination of individual components linked together.

— In (b)(ii) above, "recognised class of chemical compounds" means that there is an expectation from the knowledge in the art that members of the class will behave in the same way in the context of the claimed invention. In other words, each member could be substituted one for the other, with the expectation that the same intended result would be achieved.

3. The "number and presentation of alternatives" in a single claim does not make the claim obscure or difficult to construe if the Markush grouping retains a minimum degree of ready comprehensibility. Ready comprehensibility can reasonably be questioned in instances where there are a large number of provisos or disclaimers within the Markush grouping.
4. The fact that the alternatives of a Markush grouping, which alternatives do not share a common structure, can be differently classified is not, taken alone, justification for a finding of a lack of unity of invention.
5. When dealing with alternatives, if it can be shown that at least one Markush alternative is not novel, unity shall be reconsidered by the examiner.

II. Intermediate/Final Products

[First Alternative

(1) Basic rule

Intermediate and final products may be claimed in a single patent application.

(a) The term "intermediate" as used here means intermediate or starting products which have, according to the patent application, no direct effect or activity which could be used to establish their separate patentability. They are described for their ability to be used to produce patentable final products through a physical or chemical change in which the intermediate loses its identity. If the intermediate has a separate patentability, unity of invention is determined according to the criteria set forth for claims to the same category.
(b) Unity is present when:

(i) the intermediate and final products exhibit the same essential structural element, and
(ii) the intermediate and final products are in close interrelationship, this meaning that the final product is manufactured directly from the intermediate or is separated from it only by a very small number of intermediates all containing the same essential structural element.

(c) Unity may also be present between intermediate and final products wherein the structures are not known. For example, as between an intermediate having a known structure and a final product the structure of which is not known or as between an intermediate of unknown structure and a final product of unknown structure.

In such cases there should be sufficient evidence which would, in order to satisfy unity, lead one to conclude that the intermediate/final products are technically closely interrelated as for example when the intermediate contains the same essential element as the final product or incorporates an essential element into the final product.]

[Second Alternative

(1) Basic rule

(a) When intermediate and final products are claimed in a single patent application and patentability of the intermediates is based on their ability to be used to produce final products through a physical or chemical change, unity is present when:

* The three Offices wish to emphasize their serious concern regarding the scope and content of Markush groups presented in some patent applications. The large search and examination effort due to the wide scope of some Markush claims and the difficulties in comprehensibility and interpretation, place an unfair and disproportionate burden both on the Offices themselves and upon third parties. The guidelines hereinbelow therefore represent a reasonable approach to the acceptance of Markush claims.

(i) the intermediate and final products exhibit the same essential structural element, and
(ii) the intermediate and final products are in close interrelationship, this meaning that the final product is manufactured directly from the intermediate or is separated from it only by a very small number of intermediates all containing the same essential structural element.

(b) Unity may also be present between intermediate and final products wherein the structures are not known. For example, as between an intermediate having a known structure and a final product the structure of which is not known or as between an intermediate of unknown structure and a final product of unknown structure.

In such cases there should be sufficient evidence which would, in order to satisfy unity, lead one to conclude that the intermediate/final products are technically closely interrelated as for example when the intermediate contains the same essential element as the final product or incorporates an essential element into the final product.

(c) As long as unity can be recognized applying the above rules, the fact that besides their ability to be used to produce final products the intermediates also exhibit other possible effects or activities would not affect the decision on unity of invention.]

(2) Guidelines

1. Intermediate and final products exhibit the same essential structural element when:

(a) the basic chemical structures of the intermediate and the final products are the same, or
(b) the chemical structures of the two products are technically closely interrelated, the intermediate incorporating an essential structural element into the final product.

2. Different intermediate products used in different processes for the preparation of the final product may be accepted in a single application provided that they all contain the same essential structural element.
3. The intermediate and final products should not be separated, in the process leading from one to the other, by an intermediate which is not new.
4. If the same application claims different intermediates for different structural parts of the final product, unity would not be present between the intermediates.
5. If the intermediate and final products are families of compounds, each intermediate compound should correspond to a compound claimed in the family of the final products. However, some of the final products may have no corresponding compound in the family of the intermediate products so that the two families need not be absolutely congruent.

(D) Manner of Examination and Other Procedural Aspects

(1) Manner of examination
Where there is a lack of unity of invention, each Office should be free to develop its own practice for determining which invention is to be considered as the elected invention to be examined. This applies also to the follow-up procedure, e.g. whether to insist that the other inventions be divided out or whether to allow the applicant, on payment of an additional fee, to request search reports on the other inventions.
(2) Easy-to-search/examine rule
Each Office should be free to adopt its own policy regarding rules such as easy-to-search or examine, discretion of the examiner, benefit of the doubt.
(3) Divisional application
(a) The applicant has the right to file one or more divisional application(s), in particular in order to meet an objection of lack of unity of invention with regard to the patent application.
[(b)A divisional application may be filed at any time up to at least the time when the parent application is in order for a grant.]
(c) A properly filed divisional application retains the filing date of the parent application and benefits from any right to priority. The priority document(s), if already filed in the parent application, need not be filed again in the divisional application.

Reference Collections of U.S. Patents Available for Public Use in Patent Depository Libraries

The following libraries, designated as Patent Depository Libraries, receive current issues of U.S. Patents and maintain collections of earlier issued patents. The scope of these collections varies from library to library, ranging from patents of only recent years to all or most of the patents issued since 1790.

These patent collections are open to public use and each of the Patent Depository Libraries, in addition, offers the publications of the U.S. Patent Classification System (e.g. The Manual of Classification, Index to the U.S. Patent Classification, Classification Definitions, etc.) and provides technical staff assistance in their use to aid the public in gaining effective access to information contained in patents. With one exception, as noted in the table following, the collections are organized in patent number sequence.

Facilities for making paper copies from either microfilm in reader-printers or from the bound volumes in paper-to-paper copies are generally provided for a fee.

Owing to variations in the scope of patent collections among the Patent Depository Libraries and in their hours of service to the public, anyone contemplating use of the patents at a particular library is advised to contact that library, in advance, about its collection and hours, so as to avert possible inconvenience.

The following marks are published in compliance with section 12(a) of the Trademark Act of 1946. Applications for the registration of marks in more than one class have been filed as provided in section 30 of said act as amended by Public Law 772, 87th Congress, approved Oct. 9, 1962, 76 Stat. 769. SECTION 1.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).

SECTION 2.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).

SECTION 1.—INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The short titles associated below with the international class numbers are terms designed merely for quick identification and are not an official part of the international classification. The full names of international classes are given in section 6.1 of the trademark rules of practice.

The designation "U.S. Cl." appearing in this section refers to the U.S. class in effect prior to Sep. 1, 1973 rather than the international class which applies to applications filed on or after that date. For adoption of international classification see notice in the OFFICIAL GAZETTE of Jun. 26, 1973 (911 O.G. TM 210).
